Course Description

Research in neuroscience reveals surprising insights into the adult brain and development, and this can be used to improve management and leadership practices in organizations, on several different levels.

Contrary to previous assumptions, this research into the psychology of adult development confirms that, as we grow older, we actually have the potential to become better at managing complex issues, and integrated and innovative thinking. We can also improve several other skills which, in today's competitive world, just might make a difference between success and failure.

The content of the course is divided into several theoretical and practical parts, based on the expertise and literature in the field of neurology (Sandra Bond Chapman, Tara Swart), organizational psychology (George Kohlrieser, Robert Kegan, Jennifer Garvey Berger), management theory and leadership (Jean-Francois Manzoni, Amy Edmondson, Jim Collins). The course includes case studies of methods employed by successful leaders and businesses (such as Ray Dalio / Bridgewater Associates or Reed Hastings / Netflix).

The follow up course to this topic is “Intergenerational Management”. For more information about this course, please click here.

Learning Outcomes

- Improve higher-level executive faculties like priority setting and decision making
- Become more efficient at managing energized, well-functioning teams
- Learn to identify and focus on what really matters to achieve higher productivity

Methodology

The workshop combines lecture sessions, discussions, model exercises and tests. It uses methods of design-thinking, and a combination of in-class learning, with interaction between participants and the instructor, with work on a modern online platform which supplements classes and enables cooperation between individuals and teams.
